The Value of Cultural Heritage

What is the “History of Round Hill”

Incorporated in 1900, Round Hill lies at the foothills of the Blue Ridge mountains in historic and scenic western Loudoun County at the crossroads of Virginia routes 7 and 719.

Round Hill was named for a 910 foot high hill, approximately 2 miles SW of the town center, which was used by both Union and Confederate troops as a signal post during the Civil War.

Early Settlers

- 1731 - Lord Fairfax granted Benjamin Grayson 1st tract of land in “Round Hill” on west side of Main Street, north of old railroad
- (No mention of Round Hill until 1858) The Area's leading community at the time was Woodgrove, 2 miles North of Round Hill, for by 1777 the main road west from Leesburg intersected the present Round Hill-to-Hillsboro Road at Woodgrove
- 1832 - the building of Leesburg & Snicker's Gap Turnpike (Route 7) changed the situation, and by 1857 Guilford Gregg had opened a store at NW corner of the pike & the road to Woodgrove

Post Office comes to Town

March 25, 1858, the U.S. postal department opened its Round Hill Post Office, and Gregg was appointed 1st postmaster, under the Confederate States of America, but forced to relinquish on Sept. 29, 1866.

Jan. 16, 1868, under Andrew Johnson's presidency, there again was a Round Hill postmark, with a new postmaster William B. Chamblin

The Railroad

Round Hill was changed forever in May 1875, when the Washington & Ohio railroad came to town:

“For the next 25 years, Round Hill would be the terminus of the line that came from Washington and would become the stimulus for the tremendous growth and development of Round Hill in the period. A turntable was put in place to allow the engines to reverse direction and return to the east”

Roots of a Tourist Community

- With the building of Blue Ridge Inn by Bear's Den, south of Snicker's Gap, stage wagons began the run into Snickersville by the mid-1890's, and the success of the Inn prompted the boarding-house craze in Round Hill & other Loudoun towns
- With 3 stores, the blacksmith and wheelwright shops and livery stables, Round Hill came into its own in 1900

Round Hill & the Vacation Industry

Writing in the book Edge of the South: Life in Nineteenth-Century Virginia, Elizabeth Atwood in her essay entitled “Saratoga of the South: Tourism in Luray, Virginia, 1878-1905,” declares that “...a railroad held the key to prosperity in the new order of things.” That held particularly true when considering what happened to Round Hill in the last quarter of the 19th century. Part of the “new order” to which Ms. Atwood alludes was the early growth of the tourism, leisure travel, and vacation industry in America. “Railroads fed the vacation industry...” in the twenty five years following the Civil War. Residents promoted their towns for what the New York Times referred to as “hay fever sufferers and exhausted brain workers.” Round Hill certainly filled the bill, now being within easy reach of Washington, D. C. whose summer climate and large population of government and office workers provided a rich market for Round Hill in its cool and beautiful mountain setting.

Round Hill Incorporated

- Southern Railroad took over in 1900 and added trains on weekends bringing more boarders
- On Feb. 5, 1900, Virginia's General Assembly incorporated the Town of Round Hill, appointing Johnson Taylor, Troy C. Ballenger, and William R. Jones the town commissioners.

Boarding Houses & Inns

Today - surviving historic architecture within Round Hill - was built in late 19th & early 20th centuries when the railroad was still operational.

Many of the residences from that time period are fairly large & architecturally sophisticated, reflecting their use as boarding houses catering to summer travelers.

The largest of the boarding houses stands at 30 West Loudoun Street, a 20-room building built in 1893 by William D. Kuhlman

Sagamore Hall

Began in the late 1700's as a small stone and log cabin. Today the cabin's sleeping loft is a modern kitchen, but the log walls have been exposed for guests to see and enjoy.

Sagamore Hall was built in 1900 over the existing log structure. It served as a hotel until about 1938, when the railroad stopped its passenger line.

Much of the history is unknown for the next 56 years until 1994, when purchased by present owners, the Barkers. Since that date, they have been lovingly restoring & improving the house and grounds of Sagamore Hall

Infrastructure of Tourism Communities

Communities focusing on tourism often modify structures to enhance their appeal. While the basic buildings may look the same, the community rehabilitates or remodels them to meet specific themes.

Tourism infrastructure shows up in several ways: an old Victorian Queen Anne house becomes a bed and breakfast, a former hardware storefront becomes an art gallery, the city park contains a gazebo with benches where tourists can listen to music,

Lamp posts have banners telling tourists something important about their visit, and an empty space where a feed store once stood provides the foundation for a new theatre and arts building. New signs & street billboards point the way to local parks, wineries, historical sites, and places to eat.

Heritage Tourism

- Heritage tourism helps make historic preservation economically viable by using historic structures & landscapes to attract and serve travelers.
- Heritage tourism can be an attractive economic revitalization strategy, especially as studies have consistently shown that heritage travelers stay longer & spend more money than other kinds of travelers.
- As an added bonus, a good heritage tourism program improves the quality of life for residents as well as serving visitors.

Founded for the 6112 Red high round hill situated two miles to the southwest of town, which was used by John Union and Confederate troops as a signal post during the Civil War. In 1915, when the Washington and Old Dominion Railroad arrived, the town began to thrive. Howard Brothers' furniture factory was established in 1900, and in 1903 the town was officially incorporated. Today, the factory contains the Round Hill Arts Center and offers art classes and is a venue for performing arts.
